ELDORADO & THE WOOLSHED VALLEY

Scattered with remnants of a bygone era and nestled on the banks of Reedy Creek at the foot of the Woolshed Valley, Eldorado is one of the last remaining authentic country towns in Australia.

The discovery of gold played a monumental part in securing the region's historical significance, whilst the adjoining Woolshed Valley was pivotal in the legend of the Ned Kelly Gang.

eldorado.org.au

EXPLORE

While the miners' dwellings are long gone, the school museum, dredge, cemetery and several churches still stand and provide an insight into life as it was in a bygone era.

Try your hand at gold panning or fossicking for gemstones along the Woolshed Valley, drop into the Wangaratta Visitor Information Centre to purchase your miner's right and maps.

You can pick up an Eldorado Historic Walk map at the Eldorado General Store.

Reids Walk takes you through a former alluvial gold mining area leading down towards Reedy Creek, that follows the water upstream to a suspension bridge over the creek.

The short Monument Hill walk takes you high above the town with a magnificent view of the valley. Eldorado's shared path is perfect for walking and cycling, traversing the entire length of the town from the Eldorado Museum to the historic gold and tin mining dredge.

HISTORY

Cock's Dredge

In 1936 production of Cock's large bucket dredge began, mining alluvial gold and tin until 1954. It was one of the largest dredges in the Southern Hemisphere – a floating monster weighing 2,142 tons and pulling the third most power from the State Electrical Grid after Melbourne and Geelong. In its 18 years of operation the dredge produced 70,664 ounces of gold and 1,383 tons of tin concentrate.

At the dredge take advantage of the dredge walk that gives you a 360 degree view or take the walkway on to the dredge.

The Eldorado Museum

Discover a time of mining legends, gold boom and bust, pioneers, farming heritage and the colourful folk law characters – heroes, villains and outlaws. View a replica of Joe Byrne's armour and other Kelly artefacts.

King River Estate 🍷

Located on the banks of the King River and incorporating our Flying Duck brand of wines, King River Estate was established in 1990 when the first vines were planted. Framed in front of a small mountain, the fruit develop enjoying the mineral rich alluvial soil irrigated via the water table just beneath the surface. Our traditional yet innovative approach to wine making involves the use of "old world" techniques where the fruit naturally interacts with wild yeasts, allowing for a natural fermentation resulting in complex, soft & textural wines.
